

ER-Diagram Explanation

users: users entity contains all information about a user. Users first and last name, phone number, email address, password and the date the account was created.

contacts: contacts relation has many users that has other many users in his/her contact list, represented by super and contact.

administrates: administrates is a relation one to many, it holds reference of a user and group. The user that administrates and the group chat related to it.

member_of: member_of is a relation many to many, since many users can be in many groups. Holds reference of all users related to all groups it participates on.

sent: sent is a relation one to many, one user can send many messages.

reaction: reaction is a relation one to many, since one user reacts to many messages with a like or dislike. Attach to this is reaction which adds the type of reaction the message received either a like or dislike.

group_chat: group_chat entity stores groups name, number of users in group, number of active users and date of creation.

messages: messages is a relation one to many with group_chat. A group_chat will contain many messages.

message: message entity contains the text field and date it was posted.

reply: reply relation contains a owner for the message that will have many replys.

has: has relation is many to many since many messages can contain many hashtags and vice versa.

hashtag: hashtag entity stores the hashtag from a message, and date first used